

Published based on Bridal Jewellery And Wedding Traditions

Bridal Jewellery And Wedding Traditions

Something old, something new, something borrow, something blue When you hear those words you automatically think a bride preparing for their wedding. In fact if you ask anyone you know they would have had something that covers all four things on their wedding day. Some of them would have thought of ingenious ways to incorporate that famous saying into their wedding preparation. For example the something blue is often a garter and the borrowed might be a bridal bag to carry though essential bits of make up. But for many brides they can use wedding jewellery as all 4.

The easiest one is something borrowed. You might borrow wedding jewellery from you family or friends. There are also places where you can rent wedding jewellery, allowing you to wear very expensive items at a fraction of the cost.

For someone who is intending to wear some thing of their parents of grandmothers then wedding jewellery can also cover the part of the something old part of the saying.

Theres nothing to say this jewellery still needs to be in one piece, you could you an old broken crystal necklace to create something brand new with added stones to customise it to your colours. If you havent been given vintage jewellery, head out to the charity shop and find necklaces which have clear crystals and pearls, these can also be made into something totally unique.

Wearing wedding jewellery that has been passed down the generations adds a sense of family tradition to the wedding ceremony. It also helps the bride feel that those close relatives who have already passed away will be with her on her big day.

Your wedding jewellery can be something new as well. If you love shopping then youll enjoy spending loads of time window shopping for your wedding jewellery. Theres so much choice that you could spend months looking through every design on the top 100 wedding jewellery websites, making it very difficult to choose. If youre beginning to feel overwhelmed with the amount of wedding jewellery to choose from then look at your wedding dress and match the stones on the dress to the stones in your jewellery.

Its also easy to include the something blue into your jewellery. If you rather the blue stones didnt shop then ask if you can have the crystal hidden in the design.

Your jewellery finishes off your whole outfit, tying it together, so its important to get it right. It should compliment your wedding dress without over powering it. If youve chosen chunky jewellery, stick with one statement piece so you dont overwhelm your dress.

You can also find this article published on Bridal Jewellery And Wedding Traditions, and on the tag pages Bridal, bridal jewellery, charity shop, Jewellery, Wedding, wedding jewellery.